The following Baseline Assessment Annex provides an overview of Australia's efforts in implementing R2P as of 2019. For a full description of the methodology used in this study, see Part II of 'Implementing the Responsibility to Protect in the Asia Pacific: An Assessment of Progress and Challenges', available here.

AUSTRALIA

Australia is recognized globally as a leading international advocate of R2P. It was a founding member of the Group of Friends networks at the UN in New York and Geneva, an early appointer of a national R2P Focal Point and active in the global network of Focal Points. The country has been a vocal advocate of R2P in the UN General Assembly and Human Rights Council, as well as during its term as a non-permanent member of the UN Security Council. Australia is one of the principal supporters of civil society organisations working on R2P and is a donor to the UN's Office on Genocide Prevention and R2P. It tends to be a strong advocate for early preventive action, although its response to the 2017-18 crisis in Rakhine state was slow and tepid. Australia is a vocal advocate for the protection of civilians and the Kigali Principles but makes only token troop contributions to UN peace operations.

Domestically, Australia is a stable and democratic state that has a very strong human rights record, open and free press and civil society, and no significant atrocity crime risks. It has strong and independent National Human Rights Institutions. However, Australia's policy of mandatory detention for asylum seekers arriving by boat is considered to be both contrary to its legal obligations under international refugee and human rights law and harmful to people fleeing atrocity crimes and the risk of atrocity crimes. It is a policy inconsistent with Australia's responsibility to protect.

Australia has taken steps to implement R2P into national policy but it has not conducted a national assessment of risk and resilience and has no plans to do so. Nor has it established concrete mechanisms to hold the government accountable for its commitment to R2P. Steps have been taken to address historical atrocity crimes against Australia's indigenous population but these have thus far fallen short of constitutional recognition, the granting of a parliamentary voice, or reparations.

AUSTRALIA

Assessment	Indicator
Very Strong	Protection of populations from atrocity crimes
	Reduction of atrocity crime risks
	Appoint national R2P Focal Point
	Sign, ratify and implement relevant instruments of international law
	Sign and ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and cooperate fully with the Court
	Establish and maintain National Human Rights Institutions in accordance with the Paris Principles
	Ensure domestic promotion and protection of human rights, focusing on the elimination of discrimination
	Participate in international peer review processes, including the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the UN Human Rights Council
	Cooperate fully with UN Human Rights mandate holders and those of relevant regional organisations
	Criminalise incitement to commit genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity
	Take measures to counter and prevent violent extremism
	Enact and implement laws protecting vulnerable groups, particularly in relation to sexual and gender-based violence
	Cultivate and protect and active, diverse and robust civil society
	Ensure a legitimate, effective and civilian controlled security sector
	Ensure the education system reflects the ethnic, national and cultural diversity of society, and sets examples of inclusiveness
	Participate in international, regional and national discussions on the further advancement of R2P
	Support the early warning and capacity building efforts of the UN Office on Genocide Prevention and R2P
	Support the strengthening of the UN's capacity for atrocity prevention, including through the UN Human Rights system
	Support the Kigali Principles
	Support UN Security Council veto restraint on issues relating to atrocity prevention
Strong	Incorporate atrocity crime risks and dynamics into conflict analysis and/or development partnerships
	Ensure equal access to justice
	Prevent nationals committing atrocity crimes overseas
	Leverage existing mechanisms and institutions (including regional and sub-regional organisations) to encourage States to fulfil their responsibility to protect
	Encourage and assist States to fulfil their R2P in situations of emerging or ongoing crisis, such as good offices and preventive diplomacy
	Strengthen regional and international networks for atrocity crime prevention
	Support atrocity prevention through development and assistance partnerships
	Support preventive actions on atrocity crimes
	Develop the capacities needed to support civilian protection, including through the training of military and civilian personnel for peacekeeping

Fair	Dealing with past atrocities
	Establish domestic mechanisms to hold the government accountable for upholding its responsibility to protect
	Strengthen the role and capacity of regional organisations
	Support the development and work of regional human rights and other preventive capacities
Weak	Contribute to United Nations peacekeeping operations (especially those with a protection of civilians mandate)
Very Weak	Protect individuals and groups fleeing atrocity crimes and their risk, in accordance with International Refugee Law
	Conduct a national assessment of risk and resilience

Australia Score: 81

Recognised worldwide as a leading advocate of R2P, Australia has taken strong steps to support its implementation. In some respects though, national policy remains inconsistent with international protection obligations.

Thematic Area	Indicator	Assessment	Notes
Basic Compliance	Protection of populations from atrocity crimes.	Very Strong	The Australian government, due to its nature and the strength of its institutions, effectively protects its population from atrocity crimes.
	Reduction of atrocity crime risks.	Very Strong	Factors such as a democratic political system, overall respect for human rights, effective rule of law and a professional and accountable security sector combine to ensure Australia is not at risk of atrocity crimes any time soon.
	Dealing with past atrocities.	Fair	Australia's colonisation starting in the 18th century by British and other European settlers was anything but peaceful. Settlement was characterised by mass eviction and forced assimilation of the Indigenous population through the use of violence and mass killings.¹ The extent and magnitude of these crimes has only recently begun to be properly acknowledged. The colonial legacy is still felt by Indigenous people to this day, and they remain one of the most marginalised groups within contemporary Australian society.² The government has gone to some lengths to rectify this. Initiatives such as Close the Gap, NAIDOC Week, the Aboriginal Land Rights Act and the National Apology to the Stolen Generations are all measures taken by the federal government to reconcile and alleviate the pain of past atrocities. While Indigenous peoples still lack constitutional recognition, the recent establishment of the National Indigenous Australian Agency, under the leadership of an Indigenous minister,³ is an encouraging sign of further reconciliation.
Policy Mechanisms	Appoint national R2P Focal Point.	Very Strong	Australia appointed a national R2P Focal Point in 2011. Along with Denmark, Ghana and Costa Rica, Australia co-founded the Global Network of R2P Focal Points. This network provides an opportunity to share lessons learned and enable the continued strengthening of policy mechanisms and architecture for atrocity prevention. ⁴
	Incorporate atrocity crime risks and dynamics into conflict analysis and/or development partnerships.	Strong	There is no specific framework of analysis for gathering information on atrocity crimes for the various entities in the Australian government. The Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade (DFAT) and other governmental organisations largely prefer context-driven methods instead of more prescriptive template-based methods concerning foreign analysis.

			Despite this, the context-sensitive information Australia habitually gathers enables analysis of issues closely related to atrocity crimes. Reports of political instability and armed conflict, and the risk assessment of prospective aid deliveries on the social, economic and political aspects of a given country allow for broad consideration of atrocity crime risks.
	Establish domestic mechanisms to hold the government accountable for upholding its responsibility to protect.	Fair	The Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade has made several inquiries into the conduct of the Australian government regarding R2P. They have made recommendations to the government to uphold R2P, especially in regard to foreign assistance and peacekeeping missions. ⁵
International Human Rights Obligations	Sign, ratify and implement relevant instruments of international law.	Very Strong	Australia has signed all twelve of the key international human rights laws (IHRL) most relevant to R2P:⁶ Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Ratification/Accession: 1949) Geneva Conventions (Ratification/Accession: 1958) Geneva Protocol I (Ratification/Accession: 1991) Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment [CAT] (Ratification/Accession: 1989) International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights [ICCPR] (Ratification/Accession: 1980) Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women [CEDAW] (Ratification/Accession: 1983) Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination [CERD] (Ratification/Accession: 1975) International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights [ICESCR] (Ratification/Accession: 1975) Convention on the Rights of the Child [CRC] (Ratification/Accession: 1990) Arms Trade Treaty [ATT] (Ratification/Accession: 2014) 1951 Refugee Convention and its 1967 Protocol (Ratification/Accession: 1954 (Convention), 1973 (Protocol)) Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (Ratification/Accession: 2002)

	Sign and ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and cooperate fully with the Court.	Very Strong	Australia signed the Rome Statute in 1998 and deposited its instrument of ratification in 2002. It incorporated it into domestic law with the International Criminal Court Act 2002 (Cth) and the International Criminal Court (Consequential Amendments) Act 2002 (Cth) . ⁷
	Establish and maintain National Human Rights Institutions in accordance with the Paris Principles.	Very Strong	The Australian Human Rights Commission maintains an 'A' rating from the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI), indicating full compliance with the Paris Principles. ⁸
	Ensure domestic promotion and protection of human rights, focusing on the elimination of discrimination.	Very Strong	Australia has a longstanding tradition of upholding human rights. Discrimination on the grounds of age, race, sex, gender identity or having a disability are prohibited by various laws, and these are upheld and scrutinised by the judiciary and the independent Australian Human Rights Commission. ⁹ It has adopted many international treaties into domestic law, and government departments have programs in place to facilitate respect for diversity and vibrant, multicultural communities. ¹⁰ It should be noted, that while many of Australia's laws are enshrined by government legislation, the vast majority are not enshrined in constitutional law. Australia is the only liberal democracy in the world that does not possess a bill of rights. While this has not stopped the overall adherence by successive governments in upholding human rights standards, lack of constitutional guarantee has raised concerns over potential abuses. ¹¹
	Participate in international peer review processes, including the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the UN Human Rights Council.	Very Strong	Australia has participated in two UPRs, the first in 2011 and the second in 2015, with the next scheduled for 2020. In its first UPR, Australia received 147 recommendations. It accepted or partly accepted 137 and rejected the other 10. ¹² In its second UPR, it received 290 recommendations. It rejected none of these and accepted 150 of these, taking note of the other 140. ¹³ Consistent recommendations over the two UPRs were made regarding the rights of Indigenous Australians, refugees and asylum seekers, violence against women and further ratification of IHRL. Many of the recommendations Australia rejected or took note of are either against current policy or are redundant due to sufficient coverage by domestic legislation. ¹⁴ In both UPRs, the Australian delegation was appreciative of the recommendations it received and endeavoured to continue to engage with human rights and the UPR process.

Cooperate fully with UN Human Rights mandate holders and those of relevant regional organisations.	Very Strong	Australia extended a standing invitation to UN Special Procedures in 2008. It has had 19 visits from such Procedures, the majority of which have been completed and their associated reports published. ¹⁵
Ensure equal access to justice.	Strong	A right to a trial by jury is enshrined in the constitution ¹⁶ and supported by a separation of state powers and an independent judiciary. However, there are issues with a lack of justice for some people in the country, particularly vulnerable groups such as elderly people, migrants, Indigenous people and those who live in remote and regional areas. While legal assistance schemes have been put in place by the government, certain disadvantaged sections of Australian society lack reliable access to justice. ¹⁷
Criminalise incitement to commit genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity.	Very Strong	Acts of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity are criminalised under the Commonwealth Criminal Code , with penalties ranging from 17 years to life in prison. ¹⁸ In 2005 an amendment was introduced that criminalised the incitement of violence on religious or racial grounds. ¹⁹
Take measures to counter and prevent violent extremism.	Very Strong	Australia has comprehensive policies to counter violent extremism (CVE) and terrorism. Coordinated by the Department of Home Affairs, the national CVE strategy focuses on four areas of activity: building strength in diversity and social participation, targeted work with vulnerable communities and institutions, addressing terrorist propaganda online, and diversion and deradicalization. ²⁰ The Department has also developed tailored intervention programs to counter the root causes of a person's radicalisation. ²¹ The government has fostered a collaborative relationship between the community and law enforcement and intelligence agencies responsible for CVE. 			website²² emphasise the importance of collaboration in protecting the public and fostering societies resilient to radicalisation. Australia is a founding member of the Asia Pacific Group on Money Laundering (APG) and holds a co-chair position in the organisation.²³ Overall, the government possesses a good understanding of the nature of money laundering and terrorist financing.²⁴ As well as a comprehensive list of domestic laws and policies to counter terrorism, Australia is also a signatory to the majority of international counter-terrorism laws.²⁵
	Enact and implement laws protecting vulnerable groups, particularly in relation to sexual and gender-based violence.	Very Strong	Sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) is criminalised and prohibited by law within Australia.²⁶ However, domestic violence and violence against women, as well as sexual harassment, remain ongoing problems. The National Plan to Reduce Violence against Women and their Children 2010 – 2022 was designed to streamline state and territory efforts to combat SGBV.²⁷ It focuses on two broad areas, family and domestic violence, and sexual assault. As well as this plan, Commonwealth as well as states and territories have also initiated research and campaigns to better educate and change behaviours regarding violence against women.²⁸
	Protect individuals and groups fleeing atrocity crimes and their risk, in accordance with International Refugee Law.	Very Weak	Australia's treatment of asylum seekers is at odds with its otherwise strong human rights record and goes against its international obligations. Australia remains a top destination country for refugees, with close to 30,000 applications for asylum in 2018.²⁹ However, due to continued political support for strong borders and action against people smuggling, government policies have enabled abuse of asylum seekers rights through offshore detention on Papua New Guinea and Nauru.³⁰
Domestic Implementation	Conduct a national assessment of risk and resilience.	Very Weak	Australia has not yet conducted an assessment of risk and resilience regarding atrocity crimes.

	Cultivate and protect an active, diverse and robust civil society.	Very Strong	The civil society sector in Australia is strong and vibrant, encompassing over 600,000 grassroots organisations including religious and community groups, charities and sporting clubs. The work of these groups is recognised and supported by the government.³¹ While freedom of speech and expression is not specifically guaranteed by the constitution, the High Court has deemed it holds an implied right to free speech and together with an independent judiciary, freedom of speech is generally respected.³² Press freedom and other civil liberties are thus widespread and accepted, and Australia is regarded as an open and diverse society.³³ Recent developments have marred the country's otherwise strong reputation. Laws passed in the interests of national security have had a 'chilling effect' on investigative reporting and potentially the advocacy abilities of certain civil society organisations.³⁴ Raids by the Australian Federal Police (AFP) on the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC), the nation's public broadcaster, in mid-2019 for breaching national security laws was widely condemned both in Australia and overseas.³⁵ While overall freedoms remain widespread, there are concerns of its slow erosion.
	Ensure a legitimate, effective and civilian controlled security sector.	Very Strong	The Australian Defence Force (ADF) and the AFP are responsible for external and internal security respectively, with state police forces holding jurisdiction more locally. Both organisations are controlled by civilian political leaders and their accompanying departments, who maintain effective oversight of their operations.³⁶
	Ensure the education system reflects the ethnic, national and cultural diversity of society, and sets examples of inclusiveness.	Very Strong	Australia has a strong education system, which is compulsory until the age of 16 or 17 (depending on individual state systems). The curriculum incorporates characteristics that further inclusiveness and academic capability, including intercultural and ethical understanding and appreciation for indigenous history and culture.³⁷ Initiatives by the government to 'close the gap' between the difference in the quality of life of indigenous and non-indigenous Australians has

			resulted in many programs targeting education and health.³⁸ Australia is also a strong performer in tertiary education, with many of its universities highly positioned in international rankings and possessing large research sectors and international student bodies.³⁹ There is concern that Australia is falling behind regarding the quality of its education in relation to other well-developed countries.⁴⁰ While it is a concerning trend, the quality and inclusiveness of the education system as it currently stands is still substantial and supports broad domestic implementation of R2P.
	Prevent nationals committing atrocity crimes overseas.	Strong	Australia has legislation in place that prosecutes anyone committing atrocity crimes, whether within Australia or abroad.⁴¹ Recent changes to laws regarding foreign fighters in conflicts in Syria and Iraq means Australian citizens can now be banned for up to two years from returning to Australia if they are suspected of being involved in terrorist activity.⁴² This and other legislation, while potentially effective in preventing Australians from participating in conflict and potential atrocity crimes, has also raised concerns of eroding civil liberties and lack of proper oversight.⁴³
	Bilateral and Multilateral Relations	Very Strong	Australia is a regional leader for participating in activities that advance R2P. It has participated in all of the Informal Interactive Dialogues on R2P at the General Assembly. In the statements Australia has given at these events, reference is made to the importance of Pillar II of R2P, namely prevention and how best to implement it. Australia also pushes for greater engagement of R2P by the General Assembly in efforts to turn sentiment into meaningful commitment.⁴⁴

		At the regional level, Australia has engaged in a number of dialogues and conferences promoting R2P in the Asia Pacific and beyond. As already mentioned, Australia co-founded the Global Network of R2P Focal Points and worked to develop the Global Action Against Mass Atrocity Crimes (GAAMAC) network.⁴⁵ Through the Asia Pacific Centre for the Responsibility to Protect (APR2P), Australia has engaged in initiatives such as the Council for Security Cooperation in the Asia Pacific (CSCAP)⁴⁶ and the High Level Advisory Panel on R2P in Southeast Asia.⁴⁷ APR2P has also carried out bilateral meetings with countries throughout the Asia Pacific on atrocity prevention and related issues, including China, The Philippines, Thailand, Japan, Mongolia and Vietnam.

While Australia has an excellent record in international fora, there are limits to its engagement regionally. The country has been criticised for not engaging with ASEAN member states over their human rights records in exchange for political deals.⁵²

Encourage and assist States to fulfil their R2P in situations of emerging and ongoing crisis, such as good offices and preventive diplomacy.	Strong	Australia has been widely praised for its efforts to assist States in the region in dealing with political and civil unrest. Australia's assistance to the Solomon Islands (See Solomon Islands Baseline Assessment), along with other members of the Pacific, is seen as an example of successful intervention to establish peace and prevent atrocity crimes. ⁵³ Yet, recently it has faced intense criticism over its lack of condemnation and punishment for Myanmar over the actions of its military against the Rohingya. ⁵⁴
Strengthen regional and international networks for atrocity crime prevention.	Strong	Australia has a history of not only strengthening atrocity prevention networks, but directly helping to establish them. As previously mentioned, Australia has had a hand in developing the Global Network of R2P Focal Points and the GAAMAC and supports the work of both GCR2P and APR2P. It is also a member of the Geneva-based Group of Friends of R2P, a coalition of governments aiming to mainstream discussions on R2P in the Human Rights Council. ⁵⁵
Strengthen the role and capacity of regional organisations.	Fair	Australia is a regular participant in regional organisations such as the Pacific Islands Forum, the ASEAN Defence Ministers Meeting-Plus and the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum. In recent years Australia's influence in these fora and its ability to further their capacity, including for atrocity prevention, is in doubt. While still a strong advocate in supporting the development of its Pacific neighbours, Australia's differing policies in relation to some Pacific nations, and an increased Chinese influence has meant Australia's influence is not what it once was. Therefore, the country's potential to strengthen atrocity prevention measures in these organisations is limited at the current time. ⁵⁶

	Support the development and work of regional human rights and other preventive capacities.	Fair	Both DFAT and the Australian Human Rights Commission further human rights work through engagement with civil societies and international bodies. ⁵⁷
	Support atrocity prevention through development and assistance partnerships.	Strong	However, its reticence in condemning human rights violations in certain countries within the region, and its ongoing issues domestically, means space remains for better engagement of human rights and atrocity prevention. Australia is a significant donor of official development assistance (ODA). It is currently ranked 11 th in the world, with an estimated US$4 billion to be spent in the 2019/20 financial year. ⁵⁸ The majority of this aid is given to Pacific countries, in line with the government's 'step up' policies with the region. ⁵⁹ While Australia's ODA covers many areas ⁶⁰ that are important to the establishment and maintenance of strong states with proper respect for human rights, atrocity prevention is not taken into direct account.
United Nations, prevention, Peacekeeping, and assistance	Support the early warning and capacity building efforts of the UN Office on Genocide Prevention and R2P.	Very Strong	Australia has long been a supporter of the Office of the Special Advisor on the Prevention of Genocide (OSAPG), ⁶¹ both verbally and financially. During their time on the Security Council, Australia voted in favour of two resolutions (2150 and 2171) ⁶² that reaffirmed support for Special Advisors and atrocity prevention measures. ⁶³
	Support the strengthening of the UN's capacity for atrocity prevention, including through the UN Human Rights system.	Very Strong	In its current tenure in the Human Rights Council, Australia has pledged to focus on five key areas: gender equality, good governance, freedom of expression, rights of indigenous peoples and national human rights institutions and other capacity building measures. ⁶⁴
	Support preventive actions on atrocity crimes.	Strong	Australia's strong historical support for R2P and human rights in international and regional fora continues into its present time in the Human Rights Council. Despite some lack of will and influence in regard to specific countries or circumstances, Australia continues to give support for atrocity crime prevention.
	Contribute to United Nations peacekeeping operations	Weak	Australia has deployed peacekeeping forces since 1947, and a total of six multinational peacekeeping operations have been commanded by Australians. ⁶⁵

	(especially those with a protection of civilians mandate).		However, many of their contributions have been relatively small. Australia has currently 36 personnel deployed on UN peacekeeping operations. ⁶⁶ Of the four missions these personnel are assigned to, only one (UNMISS) has a protection of civilians mandate. ⁶⁷
	Develop the capacities needed to support civilian protection, including through the training of military and civilian personnel for peacekeeping.	Strong	Australia has a large and varied capacity to support and train personnel for peacekeeping and peacebuilding. Both the ADF and AFP possess facilities to better equip personnel with skills and knowledge of contemporary peacekeeping. The ADF Peace Operations Training Centre provides UN-accredited courses to train Staff Officers and Military Experts on Mission, as well as specific Gender Advisers.⁶⁸ The AFP's International Deployment Group receives training covering cultural sensitivities, capacity building, remote first aid and UN police training modules. It was the only police force in the world to receive recognition by the UN for its pre-deployment training programs.⁶⁹ As well as leading missions to Timor-Leste and the Solomon Islands, Australia has also mentored several Pacific nations in improving their police forces and security sector governance. Furthermore, Australia developed the Australian Civil-Military Centre (ACMC), a whole of government approach to coordinate peacekeeping, humanitarian relief and disaster management efforts. It is responsible for supporting the country's national action plan on the implementation of UN Resolution 1325 and integrating aspects of Women, Peace and Security into international deployments.⁷⁰ Along with the UK and Switzerland, Australia is the only country to develop guidelines on the protection of civilians and is developing a training manual to better operationalise these guidelines.⁷¹ Despite these substantial capacities, atrocity prevention and atrocity related indicators are not specifically addressed in any current training provided by Australia.
	Support the Kigali Principles.	Very Strong	Australia is a signatory to the Kigali Principles on the Protection of Civilians. ⁷²
	Support UN Security Council veto restraint on issues relating to atrocity prevention.	Very Strong	Australia is a signatory to the Security Council code of conduct regarding atrocity crimes, as well as the French/Mexican initiative on veto restraint in the case of mass atrocity crimes. ⁷³
